PHILADELPHIA — A coalition of health groups in the city of Philadelphia is urging the city council to pass a law that would make it illegal for anyone to smoke in public places.

The coalition, which includes the American Lung Association, the American Heart Association, and the American Cancer Society, says that the city council has the authority to pass such a law.

The coalition says that the city council has the authority to pass such a law because the city is a "municipal corporation" and has the power to "enact laws for the health, safety, and morals of the city."

Chinese freed without ransom, says gov

MANILA, Philippines — The Philippine government has announced that it has freed 10 Chinese fishermen who were captured by the Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) in the South China Sea. The fishermen were released without any ransom being paid, a move that has been welcomed by the Chinese government. The PCG said the fishermen were found in a small boat in the South China Sea, about 100 nautical miles from the Philippine coast. The fishermen were released after a search and rescue operation. The Chinese government said the fishermen were released after a search and rescue operation. The Chinese government said the fishermen were released after a search and rescue operation.

There will be no further action against the fishermen and their vessel, according to the PCG.

Pakistan hunts Taliban leaders, says victory nears

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Pakistan's military chief said Tuesday that the country's forces were closing in on the Taliban leadership in the northwestern province of FATA, and that victory was near.

The chief of the armed forces, Gen. Ashfaq Khan, said in a televised address that the military had killed or captured more than 1,000 Taliban fighters in the past few months.

He said that the Taliban leadership was now in a state of panic and that the military was closing in on them. He said that the Taliban were now being hunted down in the mountains of FATA.

The Taliban had been fighting a guerrilla war against the Pakistani military since the U.S. invasion of Afghanistan in 2001. They had been based in the mountains of FATA, which is a semi-autonomous province of Pakistan.

Berlusconi blocks publication of photos

ROME, Italy (AP) — Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi has blocked the publication of a photograph of a woman, a move that has sparked controversy.

The photograph in question shows a woman in a dark, form-fitting dress, possibly a model or a public figure. Berlusconi's decision to block the photo has been seen as an attempt to control the media and protect the image of the government.

The woman in the photo is identified as a model, and the photo was taken for a magazine. Berlusconi's decision to block the photo has been seen as an attempt to control the media and protect the image of the government.

Bowie takes 2nd place in British talent show

LONDON (AP) — David Bowie has taken second place in the final of the British talent show "The X Factor," a result that has surprised many.

Bowie, who is known for his work in music and acting, was one of the contestants in the show. He performed a song that was well-received by the judges and the audience.

Bowie's second-place finish was a surprise, as he was not considered a favorite to win. The show is a popular British talent competition that has produced many successful artists.

Rape of Darfur women common

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A report from the United Nations says that rape is a common tactic used by the Sudanese government and its allies in the Darfur region of Sudan.

The report, which was released last week, says that the Sudanese government and its allies have been using rape as a weapon of war against the people of Darfur. It says that the rape is being used to terrorize the population and to drive them from their homes.

The report also says that the Sudanese government and its allies have been using rape to target specific groups of people, including women and children. It says that the rape is being used to punish these groups for their perceived support of the opposition.

That dreaded R word

By the end of 2000, the word "recession" will be a household name. But as the economy slows, investors are looking for ways to protect their portfolios. One way is to invest in companies that are not affected by the recession. These companies are called "recession-proof" companies. They are companies that provide essential services, such as utilities, healthcare, and food. These companies are likely to continue to grow even if the economy slows down. Investors should look for these companies as a way to protect their investments during a recession.

Already negative

Many investors are already negative about the economy. They are worried that the economy will slow down significantly. This is a concern because a slow economy means lower corporate earnings, which can lead to lower stock prices. Investors should be aware of this risk and take steps to protect their investments.

Is electronics in its death throes?

MAPPING THE FUTURE

The electronics industry is facing a period of intense scrutiny and uncertainty. Analysts are questioning the long-term viability of the sector, citing factors such as market saturation, technological obsolescence, and intense competition. However, industry leaders remain optimistic, arguing that innovation and strategic partnerships will drive the industry's growth in the years ahead.

The industry's future is uncertain, with many analysts predicting a period of consolidation and restructuring. Companies are being forced to reassess their business models and focus on core competencies. Despite the challenges, there is still a strong belief in the potential of electronics to transform various aspects of society, from healthcare to education.

SM group waxes optimistic

A group of small business owners and managers are expressing optimism about the economic outlook for the coming year. They believe that despite current challenges, the economy is showing signs of recovery, and their businesses are well-positioned to capitalize on new opportunities.

The group's optimism is based on several factors, including improved consumer confidence and a steady stream of new product launches. They expect that these factors will lead to increased sales and profitability for businesses in the sector.

While the group is optimistic, they also acknowledge the risks involved in the current market environment. They stress the importance of staying agile and responsive to changing market conditions to ensure long-term success.
